

God's Politics

a blog by Jim Wallis and friends

Sultans of Satire Aims to Bridge Gaps with Muslims, Arabs Through Comedy

by Megan Sweas 10-31-2012 | 1:31pm

Post a Comment | Write to the Editor

Donate

LOS ANGELES — Unshaven and wearing a black hoodie and cap, Omar Elba looked out from the lectern, surrounded by a gold cross and organ pipes. "Moses, you are my nizzle fo' shizzle," said the Egyptian-born Muslim comedian, doing his best to channel Snoop Dogg.

Related Reading

Free-Speech Fundamentalism by Danny Duncan Collum

What We Know About Muslims by Eboo Patel

'A Clash of Fanaticisms' by Jim Rice

Racial Politics by Jim Wallis

Islam on the Verge by Adnan Sijadzic

It's a joke he's done before, but never in a church.

The unique setting of their performance inside Westwood Hills Congregational Church wasn't lost on any of the performers at the Sultans of Satire comedy show. Yet the sacred stage didn't keep them from swearing or talking about sex, although it inspired more jokes about growing up Jewish, Muslim, and Christian than one might typically hear during stand-up.

"I don't know whether to tell jokes or tell you my confessions," Elba said, opening up the show.

Produced by the Levantine Cultural Center, which is dedicated to highlighting Middle Eastern and Arab culture, the Sultans of Satire stand-up show aims to challenge stereotypes and sensitivities while bringing people together with a few laughs.

While only about 50 people came to the Westwood Hills fundraising event, it would only take the right person in this town to see the act and put it on television. And "that'd carry along the entire cultural center," said Jordan Elgrably, the Levantine's co-founder.

Elgrably started the Sultans of Satire in November 2005, the same month that Comedy Central started its higher profile Axis of Evil comedy tour. Engaging youth has been a goal of the cultural center since its founding in 2001.

"We didn't want the Levantine Center to be about preserving cultural heritage and presenting Middle Eastern culture only in terms of folklore," Elgrably said.

"Americans have no problem looking at beautiful calligraphy ... but what about provocative ideas?"

The Sultans of Satire know how to do provocative, but by 2008, the show had lost some of its edge. "Some of the comedians were just doing the same hairy Arab jokes over and over, and that got boring," Elgrably said.

The show had run monthly at L.A. comedy clubs such as the Laugh Factory, but Elgrably decided to wind it down, saving it for special occasions. He brought it back this summer as a monthly gig at the Levantine center, with additional shows elsewhere.

More than a decade after 9/11, current events continue to give the comedians enough fresh material to complement their riffs on family life and dating. Hair jokes still get laughs.

"My girlfriend's Persian, so you know what that means," riffed half-Persian, half-Indian Sikh comedian Omid Singh. "She's got an even bigger beard than me."

Singh has learned that conspiracy theories about 9/11 don't "fly" with this audience. But the diverse audience appreciated jokes about the fear of Muslims, Arabs, or anyone with dark skin.

"I'm just as scared of my people as you are," Jordanian comic Mike Batayeh said, explaining that he'll say something in Arabic when he sees a suspicious looking Arab on a plane. "Like if anything goes down, he's going to spare me."

"Black person, you're welcome, by the way," he also joked, calling out Susanne Bronson, an African-American audience member. "Nothing good came out of 9/11. Nothing except for the first time in American history, you guys are not public enemy No. 1."

"We appreciate it," Bronson shouted back with a laugh.

Her own background has taught her the importance of laughter. "When you're part of a demographic that people are afraid of, humor is very good," she said. "It disarms people."

Mona Shaikh, a Pakistani immigrant who runs the Muslims Do It Better website that pokes fun at the conservative culture that she grew up in, expects that her material would offend Muslims -- much of it couldn't be printed in a family newspaper.

The recent fundraiser was Shaikh's second Sultans of Satire show. After her first show, she was surprised to hear compliments from Muslim women in head scarves.

"Folks are actually much more open-minded than I give them credit for," she said. "Comedy is such a powerful tool. It lets you talk about really heavy topics in a very entertaining way."

Through her website, she's heard from Muslims from Pakistan to Morocco, and most love her work. But one or two people have also asked her to stop, and she jokes that the Taliban has issued a fatwa, or religious edict, against her.

Batayeh, who was raised Catholic, has had Muslims compliment and chastise him for talking about Islam's Prophet Muhammad. People seem more sensitive these days, said the Sultans of Satire regular, but that didn't stop him from saying that Muhammad "pulled the hottest girl, the richest girl in the land." It's intended as a compliment, he said.

"Sometimes you want to bring up some topics that are going to be fodder for discussion afterwards. You want some kind of reaction as opposed to none," he said. But ultimately the goal is to make them laugh, and when people are able to lose their inhibitions, it's magical, he added.

"It's almost like a church," Batayeh said, noting the irony of the fundraiser's location. "They say we're all connected somehow, but you really feel that through laughter. ... It just does something to the human spirit."

"Hopefully," he added before the show, "the church doesn't collapse upon us."

Post a Comment | Write to the Editor

Sojourners relies on the support of readers like you to sustain our message and ministry.

Donate

RELATED STORIES

Free-Speech Fundamentalism by Danny Duncan Collum

What We Know About Muslims by Eboo Patel

RESOURCES

Christians and the Apocalypse(Discussion Guide)

Christians and the Global Economy (Discussion Guide)

Like what you're reading? Get Sojourners E-Mail updates!

Your E-Mail  Sign Up

Sojourners Comment Community Covenant

I will express myself with civility, courtesy, and respect for every member of the Sojourners online community, especially toward those with whom I disagree, even if I feel disrespected by them. (Romans 12:17-21)

I will express my disagreements with other community members' ideas without insulting, mocking, or slandering them personally. (Matthew 5:22)

I will not exaggerate others' beliefs nor make unfounded prejudicial assumptions based on labels, categories, or stereotypes. I will always extend the benefit of the doubt. (Ephesians 4:29)

I will hold others accountable by clicking "report" on comments that violate these principles, based not on what ideas are expressed but on how they're expressed. (2 Thessalonians 3:13-15)

I understand that comments reported as abusive are reviewed by Sojourners staff and are subject to removal. Repeat offenders will be blocked from making further comments. (Proverbs 18:7)

Add a comment...

Post to Facebook

Posting as John Ciccolini (Change)

Comment

Facebook social plugin

Most Read

What We Parents Must Do by Jim Wallis 12-17-2012

What Would Jesus Say To the NRA? by Shane Claiborne 12-24-2012

9mm Golden Calves by James E. Atwood 11-27-2012

Be Kind, Rewind: 10 Best Spiritual TV Series to Gift This Christmas by Cathleen Falsani 12-12-2012

War On Christmas? Sign This Minister Up! by Mark Sandlin 11-30-2012

If seminary is in your future, Come & See The School of Theology at the University of the South Feb. 21-23, 2013.

Subscribe to Sojourners Today

- Subscribe to Sojourners
- Digital Edition
- Renew
- Give a Gift
- Manage Your Subscription

Follow Us

SIGN UP FOR OUR NEWSLETTER

Your E-Mail  SIGN UP

CROSS ROADS

The author of THE SHACK delivers this year's most inspiring Christmas gift!

CLICK TO READ MORE

Top Blog Posts

- MOST POPULAR
  - RECENTLY POSTED
  - WEB EXTRAS
- What We Parents Must Do by Jim Wallis
  - What Would Jesus Say To the NRA? by Shane Claiborne
  - Be Kind, Rewind: 10 Best Spiritual TV Series to Gift This Christmas by Cathleen Falsani
  - War On Christmas? Sign This Minister Up! by Mark Sandlin
  - 10 reasons Why Men Should Not Be Ordained For Ministry by Eugene Cho
  - Christmas Music That Isn't Horrible by Brandon Hook
  - Unexpected Grace in Les Miz by Donald Heinz
  - The Age of Innocence: Wes Anderson's 'Moonrise Kingdom' by Cathleen Falsani
  - Dear Christians: Relax. There's No War on Our Faith by Christian Piatt
  - Top 5 Best and Worst Bits of 'Christian Sex' Advice by Melissa Otterbein

Blog Tag Cloud

- Activism America Bible change Children Christ
  - Christian Church Community Culture
  - Economics Environment Evangelical Faith Faith and Politics general global issues God
  - government Human Rights Immigration
  - Jesus Justice Ministry Nonviolence Peace
  - Politics Poor Poverty Prayer President President
  - Obama Race Religion Sojourners Spirituality
  - Theology Violence War Women
- more tags

More On These Topics

Topics Life and Peace Global Issues

Tag Comedy Muslims 9/11 comedy central arabs sultans of satire middle eastern

Christians, Muslims, and the Common Good

A NEW discussion guide from the editors of Sojourners magazine

Includes four sessions, each with articles from Sojourners magazine and the Sojourners God's Politics blog, questions for discussion, and ideas for further study.

BUY NOW, VIEW NOW

View or print instantly with Adobe Reader

IN SOJOSTORE

Justice for the Poor DVD + Study Guide

Teaching you how to respond to poverty in your area and around the world.

Buy Now

*DVD and study guide can be purchased separately.

Subscribe

- Get E-Mail Update
- Change E-Mail Preferences
- Get Sojourners Magazine
- Magazine Renewals
- Give a Gift Subscription
- Magazine Customer Service
- Pay My Bill

Donate

- Give Online
- Sustainers Circle

About Us

- Diversity Statement
- History
- Staff
- Internships
- Contact Us

Topics

- Racial and Social Justice
- Life and Peace
- Environmental Stewardship

Advertise

- Media Kit
- Contact Our Ad Staff
- Advertising Policy
- Just Giving Guide
- Classifieds